

English, 2018 EC, entrance exam, version 2

Grade 12 · English · 2018 E.C.

Time allowed: 120 minutes

Questions: 87

Total marks: 87

Name _____ Grade _____ ID No. _____ Date _____

1. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one- party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near- disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World. (1)
- The purpose of mentioning China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and North Korea is to show that...
- A. No country today shows allegiance to communist ideology
 - B. The world has known only a handful of countries who were ruled by communist parties
 - C. These are the countries that are still under the rule of communist parties
 - D. The world is still deeply divided in ideology

2. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one-party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near-disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World.

(1)

Which one of the following is true about the Third World?

- A. It is no more a valid concept in the categorization of the countries of the world
- B. It is still a valid concept in the categorization of the countries of the world
- C. The countries in this category do not share anything in common any more
- D. The countries in this category have all become democratic

3. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one-party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near-disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World.

(1)

"Them" in line 28 refers to

- | | |
|---------------------------|--------------------------|
| A. Third World countries | B. First World countries |
| C. Second World countries | D. Characteristics |

4. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one-party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near-disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World.

(1)

"..have traditionally distinguished between industrial.." distinguished (line 1) means

- | | |
|----------------------------|--------------------------|
| A. Discussed | B. Determined |
| C. Accepted the difference | D. Showed the similarity |

5. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one-party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near-disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World.

(1)

"..were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic" stable (line 11) means...

- | | |
|------------|-------------------|
| A. Poor | B. Not changing |
| C. Serious | D. Helping others |

6. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one-party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near-disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World.

(1)

"These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate.." trends (line 27) means

- | | |
|--------------------|----------------------|
| A. Development | B. Promotion |
| C. Acceptable move | D. General direction |

7. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one-party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near-disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World.

(1)

Which one of the following is the characteristic of the First World?

- A. Low level of economic development and widespread poverty
- B. Planned economy and communist party rule
- C. High standard of living
- D. Dictatorial communist party rule

8. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one-party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near-disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World.

(1)

Which of the following are categorized under the Second World?

- A. Poor countries
- B. Industrial democratic states
- C. Countries that have recently gained independence
- D. Communist states

9. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one-party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near-disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World.

(1)

Which one of the following is true about the status of communism today?

- A. The number of communist countries has decreased recently
- B. The number of communist countries has increased recently
- C. No country today declares allegiance to communist ideology
- D. Communism is gaining more importance in Africa

10. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one-party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near-disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World.

(1)

Beginning in 1989, a major change in world politics has come about because of the collapse of...

- A. Communism in the Soviet Union
- B. The former Soviet Union and China
- C. The German wall and Vietnam
- D. Communism in Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Cuba

11. Most textbooks and courses in comparative politics have traditionally distinguished between industrial (and primarily Western) democracies — the First World; communist states as the Second World; and poor countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America that had recently gained independence as the Third World. This categorization was based, in part, on distinctive economic features that helped characterize different political systems. Economic organization and performance both affected and reflected the realities of politics in these different political systems: the capitalist (or market) economies and high standard of living in North America, Western Europe, Japan, and a few other countries; the socialist (or planned) economies of countries ruled by a Communist Party, such as the Soviet Union and China; and the low level of economic development and widespread poverty characteristic of the Third World. Democracy was another dividing line in this way of looking at the nations of the world. The capitalist industrialized countries were not only wealthy but also stable and democratic; communist systems were unquestionably dictatorial; and Third World nations had a despotic leader, one-party rule, a military regime, or — at best — democracy marred by high levels of social and political violence. One of the consequences of the many profound changes of recent decades is that these economic and political differences among types of countries are no longer so clear. For one thing, sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries in recent years make it difficult to generalize with confidence about the Third World. Furthermore, scores of developing countries have become democratic in the past two decades. From Argentina to Zimbabwe, countries that were formerly undemocratic have adopted democratic institutions. Linked to the swelling of the ranks of democratic countries in the Third World has been the near-disappearance of countries in the Second World. Beginning in 1989, the collapse of communism in the former Soviet Union and East Central Europe set off a revolutionary change in world politics. Only a handful of countries — China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea) — are now ruled by communist parties and declare an allegiance to communist ideology. It follows that "Second World" is no longer a useful category by which to classify countries. These recent economic and political trends challenge and complicate the way that comparativists categorize the world's countries. But we believe that "Third World" remains a valid and useful concept and that the countries included in this text continue to share many distinct characteristics that allow us to identify them as part of the Third World.

(1)

Which one of the following is the result of the profound changes of recent decades?

- A. Sharp differences in growth rates among developing countries
- B. Scores of developing countries have become democratic
- C. Collapse of communism
- D. The economic and political differences among the First, Second and Third World became less clear

12. Lions are opportunists: they prefer to eat without having to do too much work. When resting in the shade, they are also watching the sky, and if they see vultures swooping down, it is off and away. Even when nothing is going on, if another animal has made a kill, they will drive it off and take the kill for themselves. A grown lion can easily consume 60 pounds of meat at a single feeding. Often they eat until it seems painful for them to lie down. The lionesses, being leaner and swifter, are better hunters than the males, who look a bit like moving haystacks during the day. The males don't mind; after the kill, they move in and take the best share. Most kills are made at night or just before dawn. In four years at Etosha we have witnessed many, many daylight attempts but only ten kills. We estimate the daytime ratio at around twenty attempts for one kill. When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole, the atmosphere is electric. They flatten. Their haunches bunch up. They can charge at any second, so we keep ready with our cameras. Meanwhile, the wind is dry and our eyes tire from the sun's glare. Two days in a row we waited at such a water hole with plenty of prey and lions crouching 20 yards away. Yet they didn't make a single charge. It can be very frustrating. But that only adds to the exhilaration we feel when we do get dramatic pictures. The kill is the exclamation point in the day- to- day existence of the lion, since these great beasts spend most of their time, about 20 hours a day, sleeping and resting. Lions are social cats, and during these times of leisure they love to rub against each other. After drinking at a water hole, a lioness rests her chin on another's back. When walking past lazing members of their pride, young lions often touch faces with the adults, an act of bonding among members of the group. The gambling cubs make contact with all. "A grown lion can easily consume 60 pounds of meat at a single feeding." consume (line 5) means... (1)

- | | |
|--------------|------------|
| A. Eat | B. Destroy |
| C. Play with | D. Assume |

13. Lions are opportunists: they prefer to eat without having to do too much work. When resting in the shade, they are also watching the sky, and if they see vultures swooping down, it is off and away. Even when nothing is going on, if another animal has made a kill, they will drive it off and take the kill for themselves. A grown lion can easily consume 60 pounds of meat at a single feeding. Often they eat until it seems painful for them to lie down. The lionesses, being leaner and swifter, are better hunters than the males, who look a bit like moving haystacks during the day. The males don't mind; after the kill, they move in and take the best share. Most kills are made at night or just before dawn. In four years at Etosha we have witnessed many, many daylight attempts but only ten kills. We estimate the daytime ratio at around twenty attempts for one kill. When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole, the atmosphere is electric. They flatten. Their haunches bunch up. They can charge at any second, so we keep ready with our cameras. Meanwhile, the wind is dry and our eyes tire from the sun's glare. Two days in a row we waited at such a water hole with plenty of prey and lions crouching 20 yards away. Yet they didn't make a single charge. It can be very frustrating. But that only adds to the exhilaration we feel when we do get dramatic pictures. The kill is the exclamation point in the day- to- day existence of the lion, since these great beasts spend most of their time, about 20 hours a day, sleeping and resting. Lions are social cats, and during these times of leisure they love to rub against each other. After drinking at a water hole, a lioness rests her chin on another's back. When walking past lazing members of their pride, young lions often touch faces with the adults, an act of bonding among members of the group. The gambling cubs make contact with all. "When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole..." lying in ambush (line 12) means (1)

- | | |
|------------------------|----------------------------------|
| A. Enjoying themselves | B. Running after animals |
| C. Hiding to attack | D. Doing what is best for others |

-
14. Lions are opportunists: they prefer to eat without having to do too much work. When resting in the shade, they are also watching the sky, and if they see vultures swooping down, it is off and away. Even when nothing is going on, if another animal has made a kill, they will drive it off and take the kill for themselves. A grown lion can easily consume 60 pounds of meat at a single feeding. Often they eat until it seems painful for them to lie down. The lionesses, being leaner and swifter, are better hunters than the males, who look a bit like moving haystacks during the day. The males don't mind; after the kill, they move in and take the best share. Most kills are made at night or just before dawn. In four years at Etosha we have witnessed many, many daylight attempts but only ten kills. We estimate the daytime ratio at around twenty attempts for one kill. When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole, the atmosphere is electric. They flatten. Their haunches bunch up. They can charge at any second, so we keep ready with our cameras. Meanwhile, the wind is dry and our eyes tire from the sun's glare. Two days in a row we waited at such a water hole with plenty of prey and lions crouching 20 yards away. Yet they didn't make a single charge. It can be very frustrating. But that only adds to the exhilaration we feel when we do get dramatic pictures. The kill is the exclamation point in the day- to- day existence of the lion, since these great beasts spend most of their time, about 20 hours a day, sleeping and resting. Lions are social cats, and during these times of leisure they love to rub against each other. After drinking at a water hole, a lioness rests her chin on another's back. When walking past lazing members of their pride, young lions often touch faces with the adults, an act of bonding among members of the group. The gambling cubs make contact with all. Which of the following is true about the passage? It... (1)

- A. Reports that lions hunt in groups B. Argues that lions are useless creatures
C. Explains the dangers of lions D. Describes the habits of lions
-

15. Lions are opportunists: they prefer to eat without having to do too much work. When resting in the shade, they are also watching the sky, and if they see vultures swooping down, it is off and away. Even when nothing is going on, if another animal has made a kill, they will drive it off and take the kill for themselves. A grown lion can easily consume 60 pounds of meat at a single feeding. Often they eat until it seems painful for them to lie down. The lionesses, being leaner and swifter, are better hunters than the males, who look a bit like moving haystacks during the day. The males don't mind; after the kill, they move in and take the best share. Most kills are made at night or just before dawn. In four years at Etosha we have witnessed many, many daylight attempts but only ten kills. We estimate the daytime ratio at around twenty attempts for one kill. When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole, the atmosphere is electric. They flatten. Their haunches bunch up. They can charge at any second, so we keep ready with our cameras. Meanwhile, the wind is dry and our eyes tire from the sun's glare. Two days in a row we waited at such a water hole with plenty of prey and lions crouching 20 yards away. Yet they didn't make a single charge. It can be very frustrating. But that only adds to the exhilaration we feel when we do get dramatic pictures. The kill is the exclamation point in the day- to- day existence of the lion, since these great beasts spend most of their time, about 20 hours a day, sleeping and resting. Lions are social cats, and during these times of leisure they love to rub against each other. After drinking at a water hole, a lioness rests her chin on another's back. When walking past lazing members of their pride, young lions often touch faces with the adults, an act of bonding among members of the group. The gambling cubs make contact with all. The passage is primarily written to (1)

- A. Scientists B. The general public
C. Teachers D. Students

16. Lions are opportunists: they prefer to eat without having to do too much work. When resting in the shade, they are also watching the sky, and if they see vultures swooping down, it is off and away. Even when nothing is going on, if another animal has made a kill, they will drive it off and take the kill for themselves. A grown lion can easily consume 60 pounds of meat at a single feeding. Often they eat until it seems painful for them to lie down. The lionesses, being leaner and swifter, are better hunters than the males, who look a bit like moving haystacks during the day. The males don't mind; after the kill, they move in and take the best share. Most kills are made at night or just before dawn. In four years at Etosha we have witnessed many, many daylight attempts but only ten kills. We estimate the daytime ratio at around twenty attempts for one kill. When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole, the atmosphere is electric. They flatten. Their haunches bunch up. They can charge at any second, so we keep ready with our cameras. Meanwhile, the wind is dry and our eyes tire from the sun's glare. Two days in a row we waited at such a water hole with plenty of prey and lions crouching 20 yards away. Yet they didn't make a single charge. It can be very frustrating. But that only adds to the exhilaration we feel when we do get dramatic pictures. The kill is the exclamation point in the day- to- day existence of the lion, since these great beasts spend most of their time, about 20 hours a day, sleeping and resting. Lions are social cats, and during these times of leisure they love to rub against each other. After drinking at a water hole, a lioness rests her chin on another's back. When walking past lazing members of their pride, young lions often touch faces with the adults, an act of bonding among members of the group. The gambling cubs make contact with all. (1)
- From paragraphs 3 and 4, we learn that the passage is written by...

- A. People who observed lions closely
- B. People who hated lions for their laziness
- C. Farmers who are aware of the dangers of lions
- D. Policy makers

17. Lions are opportunists: they prefer to eat without having to do too much work. When resting in the shade, they are also watching the sky, and if they see vultures swooping down, it is off and away. Even when nothing is going on, if another animal has made a kill, they will drive it off and take the kill for themselves. A grown lion can easily consume 60 pounds of meat at a single feeding. Often they eat until it seems painful for them to lie down. The lionesses, being leaner and swifter, are better hunters than the males, who look a bit like moving haystacks during the day. The males don't mind; after the kill, they move in and take the best share. Most kills are made at night or just before dawn. In four years at Etosha we have witnessed many, many daylight attempts but only ten kills. We estimate the daytime ratio at around twenty attempts for one kill. When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole, the atmosphere is electric. They flatten. Their haunches bunch up. They can charge at any second, so we keep ready with our cameras. Meanwhile, the wind is dry and our eyes tire from the sun's glare. Two days in a row we waited at such a water hole with plenty of prey and lions crouching 20 yards away. Yet they didn't make a single charge. It can be very frustrating. But that only adds to the exhilaration we feel when we do get dramatic pictures. The kill is the exclamation point in the day- to- day existence of the lion, since these great beasts spend most of their time, about 20 hours a day, sleeping and resting. Lions are social cats, and during these times of leisure they love to rub against each other. After drinking at a water hole, a lioness rests her chin on another's back. When walking past lazing members of their pride, young lions often touch faces with the adults, an act of bonding among members of the group. The gambling cubs make contact with all. (1)
- Paragraph 3 implies that lions...

- A. Like the flesh of some animals more than others
- B. Are stronger than most of the other hunting animals who live in the same place
- C. Can hunt better at night than during the daytime
- D. Can hunt better during the daytime than at night

18. Lions are opportunists: they prefer to eat without having to do too much work. When resting in the shade, they are also watching the sky, and if they see vultures swooping down, it is off and away. Even when nothing is going on, if another animal has made a kill, they will drive it off and take the kill for themselves. A grown lion can easily consume 60 pounds of meat at a single feeding. Often they eat until it seems painful for them to lie down. The lionesses, being leaner and swifter, are better hunters than the males, who look a bit like moving haystacks during the day. The males don't mind; after the kill, they move in and take the best share. Most kills are made at night or just before dawn. In four years at Etosha we have witnessed many, many daylight attempts but only ten kills. We estimate the daytime ratio at around twenty attempts for one kill. When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole, the atmosphere is electric. They flatten. Their haunches bunch up. They can charge at any second, so we keep ready with our cameras. Meanwhile, the wind is dry and our eyes tire from the sun's glare. Two days in a row we waited at such a water hole with plenty of prey and lions crouching 20 yards away. Yet they didn't make a single charge. It can be very frustrating. But that only adds to the exhilaration we feel when we do get dramatic pictures. The kill is the exclamation point in the day- to- day existence of the lion, since these great beasts spend most of their time, about 20 hours a day, sleeping and resting. Lions are social cats, and during these times of leisure they love to rub against each other. After drinking at a water hole, a lioness rests her chin on another's back. When walking past lazing members of their pride, young lions often touch faces with the adults, an act of bonding among members of the group. The gambling cubs make contact with all. Which of the following sentences summarizes the main idea of paragraph 1? (1)

- A. Lions prefer to eat an animal that has died or been killed than to kill one themselves
- B. Lions do little but hunt, eat, rest and sleep
- C. Lionesses are better hunters, but lions are better eaters
- D. Lions eat more than any other animals

19. Lions are opportunists: they prefer to eat without having to do too much work. When resting in the shade, they are also watching the sky, and if they see vultures swooping down, it is off and away. Even when nothing is going on, if another animal has made a kill, they will drive it off and take the kill for themselves. A grown lion can easily consume 60 pounds of meat at a single feeding. Often they eat until it seems painful for them to lie down. The lionesses, being leaner and swifter, are better hunters than the males, who look a bit like moving haystacks during the day. The males don't mind; after the kill, they move in and take the best share. Most kills are made at night or just before dawn. In four years at Etosha we have witnessed many, many daylight attempts but only ten kills. We estimate the daytime ratio at around twenty attempts for one kill. When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole, the atmosphere is electric. They flatten. Their haunches bunch up. They can charge at any second, so we keep ready with our cameras. Meanwhile, the wind is dry and our eyes tire from the sun's glare. Two days in a row we waited at such a water hole with plenty of prey and lions crouching 20 yards away. Yet they didn't make a single charge. It can be very frustrating. But that only adds to the exhilaration we feel when we do get dramatic pictures. The kill is the exclamation point in the day- to- day existence of the lion, since these great beasts spend most of their time, about 20 hours a day, sleeping and resting. Lions are social cats, and during these times of leisure they love to rub against each other. After drinking at a water hole, a lioness rests her chin on another's back. When walking past lazing members of their pride, young lions often touch faces with the adults, an act of bonding among members of the group. The gambling cubs make contact with all. Which of the following sentences from the passage could be evidence for the fact that lions feel themselves part of a group rather than part of a two-parent family? (1)

- A. When walking past lazing members of their pride, young lions often touch faces with the adults, an act of bonding among members of the group.
- B. After drinking at a water hole, a lioness rests her chin on another's back.
- C. In our years at Etosha we have witnessed many, many daylight attempts but only ten kills.
- D. When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole, the atmosphere is electric.

20. Lions are opportunists: they prefer to eat without having to do too much work. When resting in the shade, they are also watching the sky, and if they see vultures swooping down, it is off and away. Even when nothing is going on, if another animal has made a kill, they will drive it off and take the kill for themselves. A grown lion can easily consume 60 pounds of meat at a single feeding. Often they eat until it seems painful for them to lie down. The lionesses, being leaner and swifter, are better hunters than the males, who look a bit like moving haystacks during the day. The males don't mind; after the kill, they move in and take the best share. Most kills are made at night or just before dawn. In four years at Etosha we have witnessed many, many daylight attempts but only ten kills. We estimate the daytime ratio at around twenty attempts for one kill. When lions are lying in ambush around a water hole, the atmosphere is electric. They flatten. Their haunches bunch up. They can charge at any second, so we keep ready with our cameras. Meanwhile, the wind is dry and our eyes tire from the sun's glare. Two days in a row we waited at such a water hole with plenty of prey and lions crouching 20 yards away. Yet they didn't make a single charge. It can be very frustrating. But that only adds to the exhilaration we feel when we do get dramatic pictures. The kill is the exclamation point in the day- to- day existence of the lion, since these great beasts spend most of their time, about 20 hours a day, sleeping and resting. Lions are social cats, and during these times of leisure they love to rub against each other. After drinking at a water hole, a lioness rests her chin on another's back. When walking past lazing members of their pride, young lions often touch faces with the adults, an act of bonding among members of the group. The gambling cubs make contact with all. "...they will drive it off and take the kill for themselves." It (line 4) refers to...

- | | |
|-------------------|--------------------------|
| A. A lion | B. A kill |
| C. The sky | D. Another animal |
-

21. I went home because I... (1)

- | | |
|----------------------------|-------------------------|
| A. felt bored | B. fell bored |
| C. am feeling bored | D. felting bored |
-

22. _____ by a dust storm, they fell into disorder. (1)

- | | |
|--------------------|--------------------------|
| A. Blinded | B. Having blinded |
| C. Blinding | D. Blindness |
-

23. Which is wrong? (1)

- | | |
|--------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| A. A shocking story | B. A confused guest |
| C. An exciting sunshine | D. A frightened situation |
-

24. We don't allow... (1)

- | | |
|-------------------|------------------------|
| A. smoke | B. to smoke |
| C. smoking | D. people smoke |
-

25. The man sitting next to me on the plane was nervous because he...before. (1)

- | | |
|------------------------|-------------------------|
| A. hasn't flown | B. didn't fly |
| C. hadn't flown | D. wasn't flying |
-

26. _____ difficult the exam is, I will get good results. (1)

- | | |
|-----------------------|--------------------|
| A. However | B. Although |
| C. In spite of | D. Still |
-

27. I don't know what you are worried about because there isn't _____ following you. (1)

- | | |
|-------------------|-------------------|
| A. nothing | B. someone |
| C. anyone | D. no one |

28. It's dangerous to throw stones _____ people. (1)

- A. in B. through
C. at D. on

29. By the end of August 2026, we _____ the ESLEc results. (1)

- A. will heard B. would hear
C. must have been heard D. will have heard

30. You smoke a lot; you should stop _____ and you will feel much healthier. (1)

- A. to smoked B. smoked
C. smoking D. for smoking

31. My mother made my brother _____ his clothes. (1)

- A. to wash B. washing
C. be washed D. wash

32. "No one helped me in my problem." The passive form of this sentence is... (1)

- A. I was helped in my problem
B. She was not helped in her problem
C. I was not helped in my problem
D. I am helped in my problem

33. I would rather _____ today than wait till tomorrow. (1)

- A. go B. to go
C. going D. to going

34. Don't let _____ to phone Ali. (1)

- A. me forget B. me to forget
C. me forgetting D. me to forgetting

35. I phoned her _____ to apologize. (1)

- A. in order
B. so
C. so that
D. such that

36. The fire brigade _____ the fire instantly. (1)

- A. put off B. put out
C. put in D. put through

37. The boy, along with his brothers, _____ the action of the coach. (1)

- A. protest B. protests
C. have protested D. protesting

38. Half of the money _____ to you. (1)

- A. belong B. have belonged
C. belonging D. belongs

39. _____ they were hungry, Tolla gave them something to eat. (1)

- A. Thinking
B. Thinking of
C. For thinking
D. Because of thinking

-
40. Active voice: I enjoyed _____ my girlfriend to the cinema. Passive voice: My girlfriend enjoyed being taken to the cinema. (1)
- A. taking
B. taken
C. was taking
D. took
-
41. Classes begin only after you _____ registration. (1)
- A. completed
B. complete
C. will complete
D. had completed
-
42. None of the furniture we bought last week _____ yet. (1)
- A. has arrived
B. arrived
C. have arrived
D. will have arrived
-
43. _____ was the bus that I was almost late for this exam. (1)
- A. Very slow
B. Too slow
C. So slow
D. As slow
-
44. I am not good at physics, but I _____ any problem with my English. (1)
- A. had never have
B. have never had
C. never have
D. had never had
-
45. Had there been no trace of evidence for his involvement in the death of the old lady in the neighbourhood, the police _____ so serious about keeping him in custody. (1)
- A. won't have been
B. would have been
C. wouldn't have been
D. was not going to be
-
46. Selam worked really hard _____ she could pass her university entrance exam and study pharmacy. (1)
- A. so as to
B. because of
C. so that
D. to order to
-
47. They have been clearing the forest for three days. _____ intervened to stop them. (1)
- A. I want someone
B. Someone need
C. How about you
D. I wish someone
-
48. When Tom arrived, he _____ doing it. But he didn't have the time to wait and enjoy it. (1)
- A. has been making
B. had been making
C. is making
D. was making
-
49. When the police arrived, the burglars _____ away with the money. But there is hope that they would be caught. (1)
- A. have been making
B. are already making
C. have already made
D. had already made
-
50. The plane is expected to land slightly after 5:00 a.m. _____ it gets late, give me a call and I'll see what I can do. (1)
- A. Probably
B. But for
C. In case
D. Unless

51. Tom believes that the machine was _____ by the operator. How can it stop working in just two weeks? (1)

- A. underused
B. disused
C. unused
D. misused

52. We should teach children to _____ when they cross roads. There could be speeding vehicles coming from either direction. (1)

- A. look out B. look on
C. look back D. look ahead

53. The babysitter has been told to properly _____ the children. (1)

- A. look out B. look after
C. look up D. look around

54. I don't like people who beat around the bush. I want them to... (1)

- A. come to an agreement
- B. look for the hidden point
- C. stop blaming others for their own mistakes
- D. stop avoiding the issue

55. _____ your shoes or you will trip over and fall down. (1)

- A. Brace
B. Bump into
C. Lace up
D. Embrace

56. As mistake is to eraser, so is constitution to... (1)

- A. revolution
B. draft
C. concise
D. amendment

57. Conservation of the environment should be a priority for both developed and developing countries. (1)

- A. Modernization B. Consumption
C. Preservation D. Utilization

58. The volcano lies dormant now, but we feel sure that it will erupt again within a year. (1)

- A. Slack
B. Elevated
C. Inattentive
D. Inactive

59. DDT has been banned in many parts of the world, but it is still in use in Africa. (1)

- A. Banished
B. Disestablished
C. Prohibited
D. Destroyed

60. Natural calamity has become a challenge to most nations in developing countries. Mankind can no more ignore the issue. (1)

- A. Drought B. Problem
C. Danger D. Disaster

61. These people are so mean that they hardly give anything to charity. They are different from the other village. (1)

- A. Selfish B. Rude
C. Unsociable D. Unfriendly

62. You came a little early for the appointment.

(1)

- A. On time
B. In time
C. Late
D. Exactly

63. The paragraph below is taken from a piece of writing that is most likely... "I have a fresh memory of my childhood experience. I traced my history back to my childhood. I was a daughter of a poor family..." (1)

- A. Expository
B. Descriptive
C. Argumentative
D. Narrative

64. "She made me remember Mona Lisa. Her smiles and beauty were indescribable..." This is taken from a piece of writing that is most likely:

- A. Expository
B. Narrative
C. Argumentative
D. Descriptive

65. Which one of the following has an error in punctuation? (1)

- A. What do you think will happen next?
- B. What can't be cured must be endured?
- C. What did you tell him?
- D. What is bothering you?

66. Which one of the following has an error in capitalization? (1)

- A. Lake Tana is the source of the Blue Nile.
- B. I do not go to work on Fridays.
- C. The major religions in Ethiopia are Christianity and Islam.
- D. None of the above

67. Which one of the following is correctly punctuated? (1)

- A. "Don't walk on the mud: it isn't safe," a huge notice said.
B. "Don't walk on the mud, it isn't safe," a huge notice said.
C. "Don't walk on the mud, it isn't safe," said a huge notice.
D. "Don't walk on the mud' it isn't safe," said a huge notice.

68. Put the following sentences in the correct order: A. Tourism in some countries has remained static. B. This is because quality service is reportedly poor. C. That left many things disorganized and unattractive. D. What is more, the industry seems to lack effective leadership. E. In others, however, it is growing, whilst markets are in decline. (1)

- A. a, b, d, e, c B. a, b, c, d, e
C. a, c, b, d, e D. a, e, b, d, c

69. Put the following sentences in the correct order: a. Further, there aren't as such any places for recreation. b. This means you will have to endure physical hardship. c. Primarily, it is often not easy to find a job that suits you. d. Living in the countryside has a number of disadvantages. e. You also have to walk to get somewhere, even long distances.

- A. d, b, e, c, a
- B. a, d, e, b, c
- C. d, c, a, e, b
- D. a, d, b, c, e

-
- 70. Choose the best combination: His purse had been stolen. He had no money to buy a ticket. (1)
- A. Having been stolen, he had no money to buy a ticket.
 - B. His purse having been stolen, he had no money to buy a ticket.
 - C. Having no money to buy a ticket, his purse had been stolen.
 - D. Having been stolen his ticket, he had a lot of money to buy some tickets.
-
- 71. Choose the best combination: I didn't get the job. I had all the necessary qualifications. (1)
- A. I didn't get the job because I had all the necessary qualifications.
 - B. I had all the necessary qualifications but I got a job.
 - C. I didn't get the job despite having all the necessary qualifications.
 - D. I didn't get the job despite I had all the necessary qualifications.
-
- 72. Dink: He stole his friend's bag. How come? Helen: ... (1)
- A. Why does one steal a bag?
 - B. Not only that! He also stole a book.
 - C. No one in the class does that.
 - D. He comes from Do school.
-
- 73. A: He is really handsome. B: ... (1)
- A. He is a sister's boyfriend, isn't he?
 - B. Are you saying he is handsome?
 - C. How do you know that? Look at him.
 - D. It is time many girls like him, don't they?
-
- 74. Shifa: ... Bosen: They also like dorowat. (1)
- A. I am making kitto for them.
 - B. Do they eat injera?
 - C. How about vegetables?
 - D. It is true they don't like shiro.
-
- 75. Biftu: Gutu doesn't like the idea of flying there. Haile: ... (1)
- A. Flying is what many people don't like.
 - B. How much money do we have to spend if we fly?
 - C. I also think taking a bus would be uncomfortable.
 - D. I don't like it either; we can hire a four-wheel drive.
-
- 76. Mamo: Aren't those light trains so comfortable? Friend: ... (1)
- A. Right. They have truly solved transportation problems.
 - B. You can say that again. They are air-conditioned.
 - C. How much do they charge to use them?
 - D. Passengers complain that they are too slow.
-
- 77. Y: You should do your homework, son. Z: ... (1)
- A. Doing homework takes a lot of time.
 - B. That is fine; let me have a snack first.
 - C. My friend can answer all the questions.
 - D. My friend doesn't like doing his homework.

-
- 78. Jember: Sorry Sir! We close at 5 P.M. Belay: ... (1)
- A. Come on! It is only two minutes after 5:00.
 - B. My friend said you were open.
 - C. What time did you close today?
 - D. I need some money for shopping.
-
- 79. Belete: How come that you look older than your dad? Micku: ... (1)
- A. I think my mum is also very young.
 - B. No, I don't look as old as you think.
 - C. Because he died when he was only 35.
 - D. You know he died only two years ago.
-
- 80. Abdo: Have you heard that Bekele was released? Alem: ... (1)
- A. I know he severely criticizes the system.
 - B. Is Bekele a businessman by profession?
 - C. What good news! When was that?
 - D. Everybody likes Bekele, I suppose.
-
- 81. John: The roof is leaking. What shall I do? Tom: ... (1)
- A. I know it will be raining soon.
 - B. No wonder. This is a very old house.
 - C. I thought it was also leaking last year.
 - D. Maybe find someone who can fix it.
-
- 82. Ali: ... Kedir: My pleasure, just tell me what you want. (1)
- A. Shall I tell you a secret?
 - B. Can I use your camera, please?
 - C. Could you buy me a battery for my watch?
 - D. Could you do me a favour, please?
-
- 83. Receptionist: May I help you, sir? Customer: ... (1)
- A. I am in Room 600.
 - B. All the rooms are occupied.
 - C. There is no water in my room.
 - D. My room is on the first floor.
-
- 84. Student: Are we having an exam next week? Teacher: ... (1)
- A. How many units have we covered?
 - B. In fact, exams are approaching.
 - C. Your result was so good.
 - D. I am not sure yet, but you might.
-
- 85. Yoyo: How long does it take to Dire Dawa? Yaya: ... (1)
- A. Dire Dawa is very far.
 - B. Not more than 500 Birr.
 - C. It is around 500 km.
 - D. It depends on your driving.
-
- 86. Mojo: She hasn't written the report yet. Dire: ... (1)
- A. Why is a report important?
 - B. This is unacceptable. You should penalize her.
 - C. Why didn't you write it on time?
 - D. It should be our duty to take orders.

87. Tourist: What do I need to visit the museum? Guard: ...

(1)

- A. You can get permission from the manager.
- B. You must get permission from the manager.
- C. You are sure to get permission from the manager.
- D. You have got permission from the manager.

— END OF EXAMINATION —

Generated on Meskerem 20, 2019 E.C. (September 30, 2026 G.C.) · Temari.et