6. Farming has evolved dramatically over the past century, thanks to advancements in technology. From the development of better machinery to the use of computer systems, modern technology has greatly increased efficiency in agriculture. Tractors, combine harvesters, and planting machines have all improved the speed and accuracy of planting, cultivating, and harvesting crops. As a result, farmers can now produce more food with less labor and fewer resources. Another area where technology has made a huge impact is in the management of crops and livestock. With the use of drones, sensors, and satellite imaging, farmers can now monitor crop health, soil conditions, and livestock well-being from a distance. This has allowed for more precise farming, where farmers can apply fertilizers, pesticides, and water only where needed, reducing waste and environmental harm. Genetic engineering and biotechnology have also played a major role in transforming agriculture. By modifying the genetic makeup of plants and animals, scientists have created crops that are more resistant to pests, diseases, and extreme weather conditions. Additionally, genetically modified organisms (GMOs) have been designed to grow faster and with higher yields, ensuring food security in the face of a growing global population. However, the integration of technology in farming has not come without challenges. While technology can increase productivity, it often requires a significant initial investment, which may be difficult for small farmers to afford. Additionally, there are concerns about the long-term environmental impact of technologies such as GMOs and the potential loss of biodiversity. As farming continues to modernize, it will be important for farmers, governments, and scientists to work together to address these challenges while ensuring sustainable food production.
- (1)

What role has technology played in farming over the past century?

- | | |
|---|--|
| A. Reduced food production | B. Increased efficiency and productivity |
| C. Made farming less dependent on machinery | D. Slowed down the farming process |

7. same passage

(1)

How have tractors, combine harvesters, and planting machines improved farming?

- A. They have slowed down farming processes.
 - B. They have increased labor costs.
 - C. They have improved the speed and accuracy of farming tasks.
 - D. They have made farming more traditional.

26. Education in Ethiopia has seen substantial progress over the past few decades, with significant improvements in access, infrastructure, and literacy rates. The government has made education a priority, aiming to increase enrollment at all levels, especially in rural areas. Primary education is free and compulsory for children and enrollment rates have grown rapidly in recent years. However, challenges remain, including overcrowded classrooms, a lack of educational resources, and disparities between urban and rural areas. Despite these obstacles, the government is committed to addressing these issues and improving the quality of education across the country. Secondary education is also expanding, with more schools being built in both urban and rural areas. While the number of students enrolled in secondary education has increased, there are still limitations, such as insufficient teachers and materials. Higher education in Ethiopia has grown significantly in the past two decades, with the establishment of new universities and colleges. Ethiopian universities have seen an influx of students, with many pursuing degrees in fields like engineering, health sciences, and business. However, the quality of education in higher institutions remains a concern, with some universities facing challenges related to outdated curricula, underfunded facilities, and the need for more qualified professors. Despite the government's efforts to improve the educational system, Ethiopia faces challenges that hinder the development of its education sector. Poverty, cultural factors, and geographical barriers continue to limit access to education, particularly for girls and children in remote areas. The government, alongside international organizations, is working to address these issues by providing scholarships, building more schools, and offering adult literacy programs. Education is seen as a key to Ethiopia's development, and the government is taking steps to ensure that more children and young adults receive the education they need to contribute to the country's future. (1)
